LAKE HAVASU CITY

Lake Havasu, a large reservoir on the Colorado River, was formed in 1938 with the completion of the Parker Dam. The lake's primary purpose is to store water for two major aqueducts – the Colorado River Aqueduct and the Central Arizona Project Aqueduct (CAP) – which supply water to Southern California and Central Arizona respectively.

Lake Havasu remained a remote area until the 1960s when entrepreneur Robert McCulloch saw potential in the land surrounding it. McCulloch envisioned a thriving city and in 1963, Lake Havasu City was established as the Lake Havasu Irrigation and Drainage District. McCulloch and developer C.V. Wood, who had previously designed Disneyland, collaborated to design and develop the community.

A major turning point in Lake Havasu City's history was the acquisition of the London Bridge. In 1968, Robert McCulloch purchased the bridge from the City of London for a little over £1 million. The bridge was dismantled in London, each piece numbered, and shipped to the United States. It was then transported to Lake Havasu City, where reconstruction began in 1968 and was completed in 1971 and formally dedicated on October 10th of that year.

McCulloch's vision to attract tourists and potential land buyers proved successful, with land sales improving after the bridge's reconstruction. By 1978, the last parcel of land was sold, and the city was incorporated. Lake Havasu City experienced steady population growth, attracting people seeking refuge from big cities and a warmer climate.

Today, Lake Havasu City is a popular tourist destination with a population of over 62,000. The London Bridge remains a major attraction, drawing over a million visitors annually and playing a key role in the city's tourism industry.
